I have witnessed a service provider donate their used bras to survivors.

I transported a survivor to the DTA office and was told by a service provider that if I was not with them, they would have been turned away because of the way that they smelled.

A patient with substance abuse history showed up at the hospital with intense chest pains and was told to have a seat and wait for an X-Ray instead of performing an EKG. (This patient died.)

A survivor shared with me that she attended woman's groups at a church and what she shared in the group was later brought up to her by a male church member.

I've witnessed donation drop-offs with all expired food and the donors did not see an issue.

I've been told a probation officer entered into a mother's apartment and threatened to have her arrested and evicted if she didn't tell the whereabouts of her adult child.

I've heard a service provider say that she wished she did not give a client the appeal process document during a termination.

I've heard service providers say they need to drink alcohol or take pills during work and/or before meetings in order to cope.

Service providers have asked me to confirm the next meeting date and time, but did not ask their client who was also present.
